[1450] Agricultural & Food Law, Environmental Law, Natural Resources & Energy Law Joint Field Trip - Climate Change Resiliency in Southern Louisiana

The field trip will offer a concrete look at the challenges that climate change poses to the coastal communities in Louisiana, which are some of the most climate-vulnerable communities in the United States. The field trip provides an opportunity to see these challenges first-hand as well as to discuss them with the community members most directly impacted. The field trip will also deliver insight into the practical responses that local communities have taken in light of this climate threat and into the legal challenges and opportunities involved in these responses.

Participants should meet at 8:45 am at the New Orleans Hilton, side driveway, at second set of glass entrance doors, (right past the gift shop) where you will depart at 9 am by bus for the field trip. You will return to the New Orleans Hilton by 5 pm. AALS now follows PCI Data Compliance Standards. We can accept your payment for the field trip up to 24 hours in advance, but in order to meet standards, we will not be selling tickets on the day of the field trip. Exiled from their home in Virginia due to miscegenation laws, the couple enlists the help of two young ACLU lawyers, Bernard S. Cohen and Philip J. Hirschkop, to argue their case and legitimize their marriage. After having their motions denied due to racist sentiments within the Virginia courts, Cohen and Hirschkop make one final effort – appealing the Lovings' case to the U.S. Supreme Court. This documentary about the landmark Loving v. Virginia case combines a story of unfailing love with the fight for civil rights and demonstrates that, against all odds, love can conquer all.

[5030] Workshop for Pretenured Law School Teachers of Color

Many minority law professors embark upon a career as a law teacher to have a positive impact upon students, to pursue justice and to transform the legal system in order to improve lives and communities. They often discover that they face special challenges in the legal academy, starting from their first day of teaching. At this workshop, diverse panels of experienced and successful law professors will talk about their goals and achievements as law teachers and legal scholars and offer ways to successfully meet these challenges as they arise in the context of scholarship, teaching, service, and the tenure process. By bringing together faculty who are navigating similar career paths, the workshop will facilitate relationships that can provide long-term sources of support.

8:30 - 10:15 am

[5040] AALS Site Evaluation Workshop

Every seven years a site visit team made up of law professors, university administrators, and practitioners/judges visits member law schools as part of the ABA accreditation/AALS membership review process. The AALS appoints one member (the AALS reporter) to the ABA/AALS sabbatical site team. The reporter is a member of the joint team and also writes an additional report for the AALS focusing on the organization's core values. This workshop is designed for those who serve, or are interested in serving, as the AALS reporter, as well as schools that will be visited in the coming academic year. Speakers will discuss AALS core values, materials available to the AALS reporter, the site visit and membership review process, and the AALS questionnaire schools must complete prior to a site visit. The workshop also provides essential information about the ABA sabbatical process, as the AALS reporter also functions as a full member of the site team and will have responsibility for a portion of the ABA report.

Law increasingly exists in a global context, both in the delivery of legal services and legal education itself. As educators, we aspire to help students develop the global competencies and connections needed for them to take part fully in the future of the legal profession. A more international perspective can also enrich our own scholarship and teaching. AALS invites legal educators from outside the United States to attend this reception held in their honor. The reception will provide an opportunity to mingle with colleagues from law schools all around the globe and forge important potential partnerships and connections.
