

AALS REMEDIES SECTION—CALL FOR PAPERS

The AALS Section of Remedies issues this Call for Papers for its upcoming panel, Remedies in Uncertain Times, planned for the AALS Annual Meeting (#AALS2021, The Power of Words), San Francisco, from January 5–9, 2021. Our plan remains the same if the AALS shifts programming to a wholly virtual format.

Remedies in Uncertain Times

Panelists explore remedies in uncertain times. No matter how virtual everything becomes, remedies must be tangible. From emergency relief in a pandemic to battles over equity labels, effective remedies remain vital. Remedies specialists regularly provide congressional testimony, expert litigation consultation, amici briefs, and public commentary. Law professors bridge the gap between history and modern application of dynamic remedies in complex and uncertain times. Remedies are core to emergency proceedings as well as the culmination of full-scale litigation. The Supreme Court increasingly grants certiorari on remedies issues. This panel examines principles that remain essential for the law of remedies to advance the goals of the underlying causes of action.

To be considered for inclusion on the panel, please submit an abstract and, if available, a draft paper by August 27, 2020, to the Chair of the Remedies Section: Caprice Roberts, croberts@law.gwu.edu. This call is open to all scholars, both those new to remedies and the legal academy as well as those well versed to remedies as a field. The Remedies Section seeks to honor inclusivity and diversity of views and backgrounds. We recognize that covid-19 may pose significant burdens on professional and personal lives. We welcome early-stage works, and we will provide a commentator to review and discuss your draft before the AALS January 2021 panel.

Thank you,
AALS Remedies Section
